

to find land to hunt on. Conserving land should be something that is talked about more since it is not only good for hunts to continue but also for animals. Without trees, people would not be able to breathe. Without animals, people would not be able to live. The effect that even insects have on us is why it is so important to save our land. Land conservation is why fox hunting is possible: but more importantly, people should continue to try and save land in order to provide a good future for the planet.

Tradition, territory, and exercise are the three main reasons why conserving land is one of the most important things for fox hunting. Why should people try to save land when it seems like there is land everywhere? If people were to keep that mentality then the planet would soon cease to provide us with the resources we need to live. Saying that conserving land doesn't matter causes people to litter the earth and leave the children of the future to deal with it. Conservatory keeps the tradition alive, gives people territory to hunt on, and exercises hounds and horses. When people hunt their passion is for the horses and hounds. When people participate in fox hunting all that matters is the horses and hounds. In order to take care of these furry friends people have to take action and conserve land so that every Sunday in the future the kids will be able to enjoy the furry friends just like I did.

How conservancy is important when you participate with hounds and horses

Anneliese Thompson

Do you want a taste of freedom? Fox hunting allows you to gallop through fields and take jumps in the woods. Yet that won't mean anything if you don't have the land to ride on. Conservancy is one of the most important things for fox hunting since you can keep the tradition alive, have territory to hunt on, and exercise the hounds and horses. Land conservancy is one of the main reasons why people fox hunt; the fields give fox hunters the space needed to enjoy the sport.

Ever since the 15th century fox hunting has been a great tradition. Teaching generation after generation how to be a good huntsman, whip, and field master. By participating in fox hunting you keep the tradition alive. This leads you to learn the history which is vital to the future of hunting. If land conservancy does not remain the focus, participating in this wonderful sport may be lost forever. Fox hunting has always allowed us to learn. You learn how to be a problem-solver, ride horses safely, and what to do when everything goes a rye while hunting. This tradition helps people to feel as if they have a place to belong. By having fox hunting as a sport people sometimes discover that it is their passion. Hunting can become one of the most important and meaningful things in their lives. By practicing land conservation and fox hunting there is a benefit for participants and foxhounds as well; therefore, land conservation helps participants to exercise their horses and hounds.

Fox hunting allows horses and hounds to exercise safely while maintaining their health. Running through fields and experiencing pure nature allows the animals to get away from their pens and stalls. It does not just improve their physical health but their mental health too. By riding somewhere other than a ring the horses build a positive mentality which helps them to grow and perform better. For positive behavior and performance with horses and hounds, they need positive reinforcement. By going out in fields and exploring the world they get to have a break from the stalls, rings, and cages. When on a farm they get to go outside but they do not get to go out into the grass and experience freedom. By walking and running through the forest horses and hounds alike get to exercise and build up muscle. This helps horses and hounds to build a better immune system and stronger muscles. Horses and hounds need fox hunting for exercise, so land conservation helps to give territory to hunt on.

Land conservation gives fox hunting territory. If there was no land to hunt on then fox hunting would have never developed into a sport. Fox hunting began when farmers wanted to protect their chickens from foxes that would kill them. Without farming, fox hunting would have never started. Conservation of land is why fox hunting is still possible. By land owners allowing hunts to ride on their land, they also allow the tradition to continue. With new construction, it is becoming increasingly difficult for hunt clubs
